

Audition Scene #2

Fitz & Longy

Summary: Fitz, a bumbling pirate lackey, and his best friend Longy, a slightly less bumbling pirate lackey, discuss the change in manners of their beloved leader Captain Ironboot, a salty sea pirate who is about to get married

FITZ

All's I'm sayin' is, it's like he's changed since we come ashore—like he ain't a proper pirate no more.

LONGY

He ain't a pirate, Fitz. He's retired.

FITZ

Well, so am I—but that don't mean I'll stop bein' a pirate, now does it?

LONGY

Well, the Cap'n ain't like you an' I. He's got his eighty-cut to consider.

FITZ

His what?

LONGY

His eighty-cut. It's what proper folks call them little things they do ta make 'em feel better'n the rest of us. All them curtsies an' how-d'ya-do's an' the like.

FITZ

An' the cap'n wants... ta be like them?

LONGY

I'll say he does—even got 'imself one of them long coats with all the buttons.

FITZ

Ooh, I do like them coats with all the buttons.